A Word from Our Principal

With only having one week left at BHPS I will unfortunately be an apology for tomorrow's assembly as I accompany the Grade 6's to Melbourne for a STEM (Science Technology Engineering Mathematics) learning experience. This school program learning experience is provided by the organisers of the Australian Grand Prix which will mean our Grade 6 students will also have access to pit lane and a number of other grand prix experience. Yet another privileged day for BHPS students.

We have had a great recent response from parents for the roster for the Sheepwash Classic and are now turning our attention to registrations! All details are on the school web site under 'Events' or on the Sheepwash Classic web site

Character Strength

Next week we will be focusing on the character strength of Self Control. I can control my emotions, thoughts and actions. I think carefully about how I behave.

Self-control is controlling one's own responses so they align with short and long-term goals.

Two important types of self-control for students are work self-control and interpersonal self-control. Having work self-control allows you to stick with your long-term goals and stay focused on a task that may be difficult or even boring. (This is the sort of self-control that also helps you stick to an exercise plan or make healthy eating choices in the face of temptation.) Interpersonal self-control allows you to maintain your temper, hold back from interrupting, and respond to others in ways that are socially appropriate.

Someone displaying self-control can delay a short-term temptation to play games on the computer if it interferes with her long-term aspiration to do her homework each night. Someone with high self-control who aims to run a marathon will not press the alarm clock's snooze button on the morning he scheduled a training run. In this way, self-control is linked to grit, growth mindset, and optimism.

At school, demonstrating self-control could involve:

- Coming to class with everything needed to get to work rather than being unprepared
- Remembering and following directions rather than needing to be reminded
- Getting to work right away rather than procrastinating
- Paying attention rather than getting distracted

Interpersonally, demonstrating self-control could involve:

- Remaining calm, even when criticized or otherwise provoked, rather than losing your temper
- Allowing others to speak rather than interrupting
- Being polite to all, even when stressed or angry
